

tion. In 2015, as part of its climate-change commitments, the government had made coal washing mandatory for supply to all thermal units more than 500 km from the coal mine.

This was in keeping with India's stand to not reduce coal consumption but rather focus on emission control.

The ministry, in its guidelines issued the same year, said "power stations located 500-750 km, 750-1,000 km would be supplied coal with ash content not exceeding 34 per cent on a quarterly average basis w.e.f January 01, 2016". It asked the coal companies to supply washed/blended or beneficiated coal.

The move to abolish coal washing has come barely 15 months after the government announced the scope of the new coal washing policy and increasing the price of products.

represented that in view of the existing unprecedented COVID-19 pandemic, it is desirable to issue the notification at the earliest," said the ministry.

The ministry is of the view that the requirement of maintaining an average ash content of 34 per cent prompts industries to import, resulting in an outflow of foreign exchange.

The ministry in a separate policy proposal has asked the thermal power sector to source coal domestically.

This paper had reported the ministry had proposed doing away with coal washing because it did not bring down the ash content in coal.
